But one should not only own a guard dog if he needs security, guard dogs due to their training are enhanced version of common dogs, some of the features that a guard dog possesses except for security are:

- 1) Intelligence: Dogs are intelligent, but guard dogs go through special training that teaches them how to differentiate between owner and intruder. They are taught to have a sense of foul play and they are intelligent enough to give their owner's security a priority. This makes them more intelligent than a normal pet dog who knows the owner and day-to-day activity of when to go on a walk and when to eat.

2) Trainable: Dogs compared to other domestic animals are more trainable, but normal dogs are not always looking for an opportunity to learn, whereas Guard dogs are always ready to learn new things. Guard dog's trainability makes it easier to get an ESA Letter for them.

3) Loyalty: Dogs are known for their loyalty, but there is a difference between being loyal enough to return to home and standing against a criminal for your owner. The guard dogs are trained to be loyal, so that they may not befriend any person who gives them a treat, guard dogs take more than usual to befriend a person but once they befriend the person, these guard dogs become so loyal to die for them.

4) Fearlessness: a characteristic found in few breeds but all the Guard dogs. Because of the duty guard dogs have to perform, they are trained to be fearless. In the house or on in your car or while walking outside, it is always great to have a companion that is not afraid of dangerous situations. Not only does it make you feel safer, but it also encourages you to enjoy your moment more because someone is on the lookout for you all the time.

5) Attentiveness: Guard dogs are very attentive; they are not only always looking for an intruder but this attentiveness also is helpful when you need them. They are almost always one call away, you just have to call for them to come to you, this is a reason they can be a very good emotional support animal, always there to support you when you need them.

6) Behavior: dogs are notoriously mischievous, if not trained well, it can be difficult to take them out for a walk or in public places, but guard dogs know how to behave among humans, because of their obedience and attentiveness, this is another reason that makes it easier to get an emotional support dog letter for guard dogs.
